Introduction

Generally speaking, education law refers to laws, regulations, and policies that govern the practice of schooling. Education law may involve, for example, representing children to ensure their access to education or improve their educational opportunities. It may also involve assisting educational leaders in navigating complex legal regimes or representing school districts or universities to address the legal issues they face. In addition, it includes educational policy work for a government agency, an elected representative or an advocacy organization.

The practice of education law touches on numerous subspecialties, including but not limited to contracts, real estate, employment/labor, special education and discipline, nonprofit law, administrative law, disability law, constitutional law and civil rights. While some practitioners develop an expertise in multiple areas, others focus their practice on a particular subspecialty. A solid grounding in education law is also helpful for attorneys who specialize in other aspects of law involving children and families, and education law can also be a pro bono specialty area for attorneys who practice in commercial law firms.

This Education Law Resource Guide is part of a series published by Loyola University Chicago School of Law’s Civitas ChildLaw Center in cooperation with the Office of Career Services, and it is meant to provide you practical information to aid you in your academic and career decision-making. Other resource guides in the series that may be of interest to you include: Child Welfare Law, Family Law, Juvenile Justice Law, Child and Adolescent Health Law, and International Children’s Rights. To access these additional resource guides, see http://www.luc.edu/law/career/practice_areas/index.html. Office of Career Services, the Education Law and Policy Institute faculty and/or from other faculty members listed in this Guide.

AN OVERVIEW OF EDUCATION LAW PRACTICE

Although many law students assume that practicing in education law means directly representing students and parents, the reality is that the practice includes a variety of clients and a multitude of interests. Potential clients include universities, primary and secondary school districts, state and local governments, teachers and administrators, unions, students and parents, among others.

Education law attracts regulatory attorneys, transactional attorneys and litigators who practice in a variety of settings. Regulatory attorneys specialize in advising educational institutions on compliance with the federal, state and municipal laws applicable to their work. Transactional attorneys focus on the contractual relationships that form a core component of any educational system, such as contracts relating to real estate, construction, transportation, and other services. On the litigation side, some practitioners focus on class action/impact litigation relating to school funding, civil rights, educational equity, special education, or First Amendment issues. Other litigators, in contrast, devote much of their practice to individual matters involving school discipline, special education or labor and employment matters. Some practitioners do a combination of impact work and individual cases. Regardless of the type of practice, however, most litigators also spend a great deal of time on client counseling, mediation, administrative proceedings and other dispute resolution techniques.

The three primary practice areas for attorneys who practice education law are: (1) government and public policy; (2) representation of school districts and educational institutions; and (3) representation of students and parents. More information about these various career paths and sample biographies of Loyola alumni who have pursued careers in these areas appear below.
Government and Public Policy

The government practice setting provides numerous practice opportunities for those with an interest in legislation and administrative law, among other things. Law graduates can obtain work in federal, state and local agencies involved in regulating and overseeing the provision of education. They can also work on educational policy issues for elected representatives or at non-profit organizations. Legislation and policy relating to school funding, special education, student achievement, school choice, racial equality, teacher performance and other topics present varied opportunities for advocacy. This practice setting also offers the opportunity to pursue alternative legal careers, such as careers focused on community organizing, legal analysis, and advocacy.

Alumni Profile: Jennifer Denny (JD ‘13)

Managing Director of Policy
Educators 4 Excellence
Education Programs (Washington, D.C.)

As a recent alumna, Jenny has already had a varied career in the field of education and civil rights law.

After graduating from Loyola, Jenny began working at the U.S. Department of Education Office of Special Education Programs through the Presidential Management Fellows (PMF) program. As part of the fellowship, she was assigned a 8-month placement with the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) in the Educational Opportunities of the Civil Rights Division. Jenny’s work at DOJ included enforcing racial desegregation court orders in two Louisiana parishes, monitoring a settlement agreement regarding sex-based harassment in a Minnesota school district, and investigating sexual assaults at a school for children with disabilities in Hawaii.
Also as part of the PMF program, she worked for 7 months with the Legal Council Office and Violence Against Women team in the Office of the Vice President of the United States. In this position, she advised the vice president on issues of domestic violence and sexual assault, and she served as a liaison to the advocacy communities surrounding sexual violence and sexual assault.

Most recently, Jenny began working as the Managing Director of Policy for Educators 4 Excellence, where she formulates agency policies that elevate the teaching profession and student outcomes, collaborates and builds relationships with key stakeholders in the field of education policy, and advises and trains teacher policy teams.

Jenny emphasized that education law is a very diverse field, so you need to think through where you want to have an impact. There are incredible opportunities at the local, state and federal levels in addition to both the private and public sectors, but each is very unique. She urges current students to use internships and classes to figure out how you want to contribute.

While at Loyola, Jenny was a ChildLaw Fellow and focused her classes and experiences around education law and policy. Through the Education Practicum, Jenny provided special education advocacy assistance to families of students with disabilities through Equip for Equality and gained litigation experience by working on a lawsuit alleging racial discrimination in a local school district.

Prior to law school, Jenny was a Teach For America corps member and taught first grade at a Washington, D.C. charter school while earning her M.Ed. in Early Childhood Education.
Representation of School Districts and Educational Institutions

Many attorneys who practice education law represent school districts, either as in-house counsel or as attorneys in a private firm retained to represent a school district as general counsel or on specific matters. Attorneys may also represent other educational institutions, including charter schools, private schools and higher education institutions. Such representation takes place either in the form of in-house counsel or as an attorney in private practice.

Areas of focus can include special education, student rights, student safety and school discipline, school board policy and governance, and labor and employment matters. This work may involve representation of school districts in individualized education program (IEP) meetings, due process hearings, and/or residency and discipline hearings. Additionally, many attorneys representing school districts and educational institutions are involved in personnel matters, including employment disputes and labor board proceedings. Their work may also include representation of clients in state and federal court litigation and before the U.S. Department of Education Office for Civil Rights and state agencies.

Alumni Profile: Amy Kosanovich Dickerson (JD ’07)
Partner, Franczek Radelet P.C. (Chicago, IL)

Amy Kosanovich Dickerson is a partner at Franczek Radelet, a labor, employment, and education law firm. At Franczek Radelet, Amy represents public school districts, charter schools, private schools and higher education institutions on a full-range of education law issues.

Amy really loves the client counseling and training aspects of education law. Whether it’s talking through a particular student situation with a principal, developing a new policy with a superintendent, or presenting an in-service training on bullying or teacher evaluations, Amy enjoys working directly with school administrators to help them make decisions that are best for their school districts and the students they serve.

Amy notes that, through Loyola’s coursework and her various internships during law school, she was exposed to many different areas of the law affecting children, all of which helped her identify and confirm her passion and interest for education law. She advises Loyola students to seek out faculty who have experience in – or do work in – the areas that interest you.

Prior to joining the firm, Amy served as a law clerk for the Honorable Morton Denlow, U.S. Magistrate Judge in the Northern District of Illinois. During law school, Amy was a ChildLaw Fellow with the Civitas ChildLaw Center, the executive editor of student articles for the school’s Law Journal and senior editor of the Children’s Legal Rights Journal. Before attending law school, Amy taught fifth and sixth grades in the District of Columbia Public School System as a Teach for America corps member.

Amy was recognized by Illinois Super Lawyers as a Rising Star in Schools and Education (2012 and 2013). She serves as a faculty member for Loyola’s Childlaw Trial Practice course, leads the Firm’s Education Law Practicum program with Loyola and has previously served as a legal writing professor.
Representation of Students and Parents

Attorneys who represent students and parents can be employed in solo practice, law firms, or non-profit organizations. Some attorneys at large law firms also represent students and parents in education law matters as part of the firm’s pro bono practice. Attorneys may provide individual case representation, primarily in the areas of special education and school discipline. They may also focus on class action/impact litigation on a broad range of educational equity and civil rights issues.

Many attorneys who represent low-income parents and students in education law matters are employed by legal service organizations throughout the country. Others are employed by organizations that are part of the Protection and Advocacy (P&A) System, which ensures that each state and territory has an organization that provides legal representation and other advocacy services to people with disabilities in the state. Each state also has a Parent Training and Information Center to provide support and training for families of students with disabilities, some of which also provide legal services to families. In addition to providing legal representation, most non-profit legal service organizations also provide self-advocacy assistance and community outreach.
Alumni Profile: Patrick Keenan-Devlin (JD ‘12)

Deputy Director and Staff Attorney at the James B. Moran Center for Youth Advocacy (Evanston, IL)

Patrick serves as the Deputy Director and Staff Attorney at the James B. Moran Center for Youth Advocacy. The Moran Center provides integrated legal and social work services to low-income youth in Evanston, Illinois. Patrick represents low-income youth within the Evanston community in juvenile delinquency proceedings, special education matters, and school discipline proceedings.

During his tenure at the Moran Center, Patrick has steadfastly worked to safeguard the procedural and substantive rights of youth who come into conflict with the law. Patrick goes above and beyond for his young clients — shepherding them to and from court, calling to see if they went to school, and shuttling them to counseling appointments. Patrick’s goal is to both protect his young clients’ liberties as well as to ensure their overall well-being.

Patrick started out at the Moran Center helping his juvenile delinquency clients secure educational evaluations, more comprehensive IEPs, and more effective supports and services in school resulting in improved attendance, grades, and reduced disciplinary issues. However, as families in the community learned about Patrick’s special education advocacy, the Moran Center drew in pre-school, elementary, and middle school-aged clients without any interaction with the criminal justice system. Patrick expanded the Moran Center’s special education advocacy to serve pre-school and elementary-school aged children with the objective of keeping those children out of the criminal justice system — stemming the school-to-prison pipeline.
Education Law at Loyola

Relevant Degrees/Programs Offered

J.D./M.A.

In addition to the traditional J.D. program (both full- and part-time), the Education Law and Policy Institute has joined with the School of Education to offer a dual J.D./M.A. degree in Comparative Law and Education. That program, offered by the School of Law and the Cultural and Educational Policy Studies program of the Graduate School of Education, focuses on the legal right of children to obtain an education. The program will produce legal experts who have a grasp of global issues of education with expertise in the legal rights of children.

Comparative Law is the study of differences and similarities among the legal systems of nations. Comparative Education applies the intellectual tools of history and the social services to understanding international issues of education. The importance of these comparative fields has increased enormously in the present age of internationalism, economic globalization, and democratization. This joint program brings together the two fields of Comparative law and Comparative Education on behalf of international advocacy for children's rights to an education.

Child and Family Law Certificate Program

Patrick feels extremely indebted to Professor Kathleen Hirsman for preparing him to hit-the-ground running as a new attorney, as well as for advising him on multiple occasions on how to handle complex legal issues. Patrick urges all Loyola graduates to maintain their contacts at the law school, because as a new practitioner you will need help.
The School of Law offers a Certificate in Child and Family Law for J.D. students. To complete the certificate, students must take one required course (Child, Parent and State) and three additional child/family law electives (including education-related courses), achieving a grade of B or better.

J.D./M.S.W.

The School of Law and Loyola University Chicago School of Social Work offer a 4-year full-time J.D./M.S.W. degree. The dual degree may also be pursued part-time.

LL.M. in Child and Family Law

The LL.M. in Child and Family Law allows law school graduates to develop specialized knowledge and skills in the area of child and family law. Interested students may concentrate in their field of interest, including education law. The program is intentionally small and tailored to meet individual student learning and career goals.

M.J. in Children’s Law and Policy (online)

Loyola now offers the nation’s only law-school sponsored online master’s level degree for professionals who work with children and families. The Master of Jurisprudence is a two-year part-time program designed to provide students with a firm understanding of law and policy as they affect children and families, including education law and policy issues. Students have the option to enroll in a program with the School of Social Work, earning M.J. and M.S.W. degrees. For additional information, please see www.childlawmj.org.

Faculty/Staff Resources
Loyola Law School’s education law curriculum is overseen by the law school’s Education Law and Policy Institute. The following faculty members direct the Institute, teach substantive education law courses, and/or oversee volunteer opportunities in the education law field and can serve as a valuable resource to students on matters relating to curriculum and/or job opportunities:

Dean Michael Kaufman, Law Professor, Associate Dean of Academic Affairs, and Director of the Education Law and Policy Institute
Mary Bird, Director of Public Interest Programs
Hillary Coustan, Adjunct Faculty
Maureen Hager, Adjunct Faculty
Kathleen Hirsman, Senior Lecturer in Residence
Miranda Johnson, Associate Director of the Education Law and Policy Institute
Maureen Kieffer, Associate Director of Career Services and Public Service Law
Monica Llorente, Adjunct Faculty
Micki Moran, Adjunct Faculty
Curriculum

The law school has developed an array of courses designed to train law students, graduate education students, attorneys and educators to address the full range of educational needs of children. In addition, students may take a limited number of education-related courses in other graduate divisions of the University. The law school course offerings include:

Core Courses:

- Education Law and Policy
- Fundamentals of School Law

Experiential Learning Opportunities

Of the courses listed above, three are of particular significance to students who are looking to gain hands-on experience in the field of education law. The Education Law Practicum, and the Civitas ChildLaw Clinic offer opportunities for students to represent clients in the areas of special education, discipline, school equity, and child welfare. Through the Street Law Program, law students have the opportunity to work directly with students in the Chicago Public Schools.
Education Law Practicum

This unique course has a classroom component and a field work component. The class meets formally one hour per week to cover substantive education law issues and to develop skills tailored to the practice of education law. For the field work component of the class, students have the option to work in one of a variety of local placements where they will work under the supervision of practicing attorneys. Students may choose to: (1) provide direct representation and legal assistance to children and families in need of special education services; (2) provide representation of school districts in education law matters; and/or (3) work on educational policy matters. Placement options include local organizations, school districts, law firms and government agencies.

As part of the Education Law Practicum, students may participate in Loyola’s Educational Advocacy Project as an alternative to an external field placement. The Educational Advocacy Project is designed as an experiential learning opportunity primarily for second year full-time students or their part-time equivalents. Working under the close supervision of an experienced attorney, law students will provide educational advocacy for youth involved in school disciplinary and/or special education proceedings.

Civitas ChildLaw Clinic

The Civitas ChildLaw Clinic is a functioning law office where Loyola J.D. and LL.M. students take on real child-related cases working under the close supervision of faculty. Most clinic cases involve representation of child clients in child welfare, child custody, and education matters. Students are expected to master the law governing their areas of practice, as well as applicable rules of professional conduct. Students develop a range of lawyering skills, including interviewing, client counseling, case planning, written and oral skills, and courtroom advocacy. These skills are transferrable to any practice setting.

Street Law

Second- and third-year students teach about law and the legal system in Chicago area elementary and high schools. Students attend a weekly seminar and teach two classes per week in their assigned school. In the spring semester students typically have the option of preparing high school students for the city mock trial competition. For that experience, prior or current enrollment in Trial Practice is advisable, but not required.

Extracurricular Opportunities

Loyola also offers an array of extracurricular opportunities for students to work on education law-related matters starting in their 1L year and continuing through graduation. These include the following options:

Education Law and Policy Society (ELPS)

The Education Law and Policy Society is a student-run organization that provides opportunities for interested students to deepen their understanding of the range of law and policy issues affecting children and parents, teachers, and school administrators. For more information, see http://www.luc.edu/law/centers/childlaw/campus/els.html.

Stand Up for Each Other! Chicago (SUFEO Chicago)

SUFEO Chicago is a student-run suspension advocacy project, which is co-sponsored by Loyola University Chicago and the Chicago Lawyers’ Committee for Civil Rights. SUFEO helps youth who are being suspended unjustly from various schools. SUFEO’s goal is to reduce the use of exclusionary discipline by utilizing law students to advocate for CPS students and parents. SUFEO advocates seek first to connect with parents and help them communicate with administrators effectively as well as to guide them through the suspension appeal process. 1Ls can participate in this initiative by conducting intake and outreach for 4 hours per week starting in the spring semester. 2Ls and 3Ls can participate in this project as an extracurricular activity and, with approval, through the Education Law Practicum. For more information, e-mail sufeochicago@gmail.com or visit http://www.luc.edu/law/sufeo.

Law-Related Education Project (LRE)

Law-Related Education (LRE) is a nation-wide movement in education and juvenile justice which seeks to promote positive youth development and to increase opportunities for young people to learn about the law. Volunteer law students participate in this movement by teaching classes about the law to the young people in the Cook County Juvenile Temporary Detention Center. Loyola students seek to develop in the young people an understanding of basic information about the court process from arrest to disposition/sentencing, about who the people are in the courtroom and what their roles are, about their rights as citizens, and about the attorney-client relationship. To effectuate the program goals, volunteers teach in teams of 2 or 3, one night a week for five weeks. Lessons incorporate interactive teaching techniques, which encourage participation from the youth, such as skits and role-plays. More information can be found at http://www.luc.edu/law/centers/childlaw/campus/lre.html.
Children’s Legal Rights Journal (CLRJ)

The Children’s Legal Rights Journal is a legal journal that publishes three issues annually, edited by Loyola students with the cooperation of the National Association of Counsel for Children. The CLRJ focuses on the broad range of legal issues confronting children. Its goal is to provide practitioners in law and related fields with the practical resources they need to be effective advocates for their child clients. The CLRJ encourages interdisciplinary submissions as well as more traditional law-related articles. The CLRJ also organizes an annual symposium on an important issue in children’s legal rights. Several past symposia and past issues have focused on issues related to education law, and articles on this topic are also regularly published. For more information, visit http://luc.edu/law/student/publications/clrj/index.html.

Public Interest Law Reporter (PILR)

The Loyola Public Interest Law Reporter (PILR) is an innovative legal publication that focuses on reporting the most current legal topics in a news format directed to students, educators, and practitioners. PILR offers feature articles and news of legal developments in the areas of human rights, economic justice, education criminal justice, the environment, and governance. In addition to an editorial staff selected through a write-on process, Loyola law students direct all aspects of PILR’s research, writing, graphics, production, and business management. PILR also is known for its yearly symposium, a day-long conference focusing on high-profile legal issues. Several PILR symposia have highlighted important issues and emerging developments related to education law. For more information, visit http://www.luc.edu/law/student/publications/pilr/.

Events, Committees and Organizations

Chicago Bar Association’s YLS Education Law Committee:
(http://www.chicagobar.org/AM/Template.cfm?Section=Student_Membership): The Chicago Bar Association (CBA) offers low-cost student memberships, and law student members are eligible to participate in Young Lawyers Section (YLS) Committees. The YLS Education Committee meets monthly with the aim of providing practitioners with an opportunity to address and understand issues within the area of public education law at the pre-K, primary, secondary and post-secondary levels.

Disability Rights Consortium at Equip for Equality (http://www.equipforequality.org/): Equip for Equality hosts monthly seminars on a range of disability-related topics, including special education issues. The seminars are open to the public and are also available by webinar. To be added to the mailing list, contact Barry Taylor at barryt@equipforequality.org.

Illinois State Bar Association’s Section on Education Law (http://www.isba.org/lawstudents): The Illinois State Bar Association (ISBA) offers low-cost student memberships, and law student members can join the Education Law Section of the ISBA. This includes access to an e-newsletter and discussion group on education law developments in Illinois.
Council of Parent Attorneys and Advocates (COPAA): (http://www.copaa.org/): COPAA is a national network of attorneys and advocates that work on behalf of students with disabilities. Student memberships are available, which offer access to discussion boards and materials as well as the option to post a resume.

Fellowships

Civic Legal Corps (CLC) (http://www.civiclegalcorps.org/): CLC is a legal social enterprise training program that empowers new attorneys to expand access to legal services for low- and moderate-income people. Corps members earn a monthly stipend in return for providing direct legal services and undergoing training in innovative legal services delivery, integrative law, and social entrepreneurship.

Equal Justice America (http://www.equaljusticeamerica.org/) awards law students spring, summer and fall fellowships to work with organizations that deliver civil legal services to those most in need.

Equal Justice Works Americorps JD Program (http://www.equaljusticeworks.org/americorpsjd): Provides a modest educational award for summer or term-time internships that can be used toward tuition or loan payment. Requires 300 hours of direct legal service at a qualifying legal project with a nonprofit organization, government agency, or university. Can be used in conjunction with stipends, grants or work-study payments of no more than $4,300.

Equal Justice Works Post-Graduate Fellowships (http://www.equaljusticeworks.org/post-grad/equal-justice-works-fellowships): The Equal Justice Works fellowship competition selects qualified and passionate lawyers who have developed new and innovative legal projects that can impact lives and serve communities in desperate need of legal assistance each year. Third year law students, recent law school graduates, or experienced attorneys who demonstrate a commitment to public interest law are eligible to apply.

Education Pioneers Fellowships (http://www.educationpioneers.org/become-a-fellow/graduate-school-fellowship): The Education Pioneers fellowship program offers 10-week summer fellowships and year-long fellowships to a mission-critical project at a school district, charter school network, nonprofit or other leading education organization. The fellowship is open to talented business, law, policy, and education graduate students with the goal of providing an opportunity to make an impact and launching them into high-level education leadership careers.

Justice Entrepreneurs Project (JEP) (http://chicagobarfoundation.org/jep/): The JEP is a project of the Chicago Bar Foundation that serves as an incubator for recent law school graduates to start their own socially conscious law firms. Selected graduates are part of an 18 month program that provides training, mentoring and assistance with the process of setting up a law practice, as well as shared office space and practice resources.

Public Interest Law Initiative (PILI) (http://pili.org/): PILI offers stipends for term-time and summer internships at select public interest organizations in Chicago. PILI also offers post -graduate fellowships for associates hired by law firms partners. Fellows are placed at legal service organizations during summer or fall before they start working at their firms.

Presidential Management Fellowships (http://www.pmf.gov):
This federal program matches outstanding graduate students with federal opportunities, including placements with federal educational agencies.

Skadden Fellowships (http://www.skaddenfellowships.org/). A 2-year fellowship in public interest law awarded to graduating law students and judicial clerks. Applicants must secure a potential position with a sponsoring public interest organization before applying for a Fellowship. Selection is based not only on the qualifications of the applicant, but also the demonstrated effectiveness of the sponsoring organization. The fellowship committee reviews the applicant's academic performance, demonstrated commitment to the public interest, and the quality of his or her project.

Soros Justice Fellowships (http://www.opensocietyfoundations.org/grants/soros-justice-fellowships): The Soros Justice Fellowships fund outstanding individuals to undertake 18-month projects that advance reform, spur debate, and catalyze change on a range of issues facing the U.S. criminal justice system. Fellowship proposals can focus on education, health and mental health issues that are aimed at addressing one or more of the Justice Fund’s broad U.S. criminal justice reform goals: reducing mass incarceration, challenging extreme punishment, and promoting justice system accountability.

International Resources

Fulbright Scholar Program (http://www.cies.org/): The Fulbright program offers grants for professionals in a variety of disciplines, including law, for teaching and research in countries throughout the world. Grants have been awarded for topics in the fields of children’s rights, education and juvenile justice.

UNICEF (http://www.unicef.org/education/): UNICEF does work throughout the world on education-related issues, with a high priority on issues related to access of girls to education.

Human Rights Watch (http://www.hrw.org/topic/childrens-rights): The Children’s Rights Watch program at Human Rights Watch produces detailed and high-quality reports on human rights violations related to education throughout the world. The organization also specifically focuses on education-related depravations in countries involved in armed conflict.

U.N. Special Rapporteur on the Right to Education (http://www.ohchr.org/EN/issues/Education/SREducation/Pages/SREducationindex.aspx): The website of the U.N. Special Rapporteur on the Right to Education describes the right to education in international law and provides U.N. news, country reports, and individual complaints regarding violations of the right internationally.

Other Resources

If you are seeking to move to another state and want to represent children and parents on special education issues, the following websites can help you to identify organizations doing that work in the state that you are interested in:

Legal Services Corporation – LSC Programs by State (http://lsc.gov/find-legal-aid): Lists organizations in each state funded by the Legal Service Corporation, the largest funder of civil legal aid services for low-income Americans.
National Disability Rights Network (http://www.ndrn.org/ndrn-member-agencies.html): NDRN is a nonprofit membership organization for the federally mandated Protection and Advocacy (P&A) Systems and Client Assistance Programs (CAP). Collectively, the P&A/CAP network is the largest provider of legally based advocacy services to people with disabilities in the United States. The NDRN website contains a listing of the P&A and CAP organizations in each state.

Parent Center Hub—Find Your Parent Center (http://www.parentcenterhub.org/find-your-center/): Provides listing of each state’s Parent Training and Information Center and other organizations that service parents and children with disabilities in each state.
