COURSE TITLE:
DANC 398: Undergraduate Research in Dance- The Sacred Body

COURSE INSTRUCTOR:
Amy Wilkinson
Senior Lecturer of Dance

COURSE DESCRIPTION:
This course uses choreography as a topic area within a performative research paradigm, allowing students to explore the choreographic process as it relates to consciousness, memory and storytelling within phenomenological and somatic research contexts. Public performance serves as the method of dissemination, recognized both as a form of engaged learning and the equivalent of ‘publication’ in the performing arts. Specifically, the research process will result in a public performance. For this course, we will be collaborating on a joint performance with professional artists from Rome’s Mandala Dance Company.

This course pairs faculty mentors with dance students pursuing research projects in Dance. Platforms cross domains of activity, encompassing cognitive, psychomotor, and artistic. Students and faculty work together on research projects to generate qualitative and quantitative data, documented in multiple modalities, including dancemaking, regression analyses, interviews, correlational and/or case studies.
