Biographical History

Margery Frisbie, born Margery Rowbottom, graduated from Mundelein College in 1944. After graduation, Margery married Richard Frisbie, and during their long time together produced eight children. Margery, while raising her children, also worked as a columnist for The New World and as a children's book review editor for the National Catholic Reporter. Her interest in writing manifested in other ventures as well. She and her husband co-authored two works: The Do-It-Yourself Parent and The Cana Couplet. On her own, Margery wrote several works including histories of St. James Catholic Church, Arlington Heights Library, the First United Methodist Church, a collection of poetry about Arlington Heights, and most prominently, An Alley in Chicago: The Ministry of a Parish Priest, a history of life and work of Monsignor John J. Egan.

Scope and Content

This collection consists of 2 boxes, spanning the years 1945-1997, and being predominantly from 1960 to 1990. The collection is divided into two sections: professional and research. The professional records contain copies of two of Margery Frisbie's publications, limited correspondence, and two audiotapes concerning her published work, An Alley in Chicago. The research records pertain almost exclusively to the life of Monsignor John J. Egan, including speeches, interviews, anecdotes about his life from others, and written remembrances of his own history within the ministry. Other records include comprehensive press, and conference notes, from Egan's activities as part of the CCUM and CANA. When correspondence is present, it is predominately between Egan's longtime assistant, Peggy Roach and Margery Frisbie. These papers are divided into two series, arrange alphabetically by subject and original order was maintained whenever possible.

Series 1: Professional, 1991-1997, n.d., Box 1

Contains information related to Margery Frisbie's publishing activities, including copies of the published works, An Alley in Chicago and Old-Timers Reunion: Reflecting on the Early Days of Arlington Heights, a collection of poetry by Frisbie. Also present are two audiotapes, Tape 1 is a recording of an Association of Chicago Priests meeting at Niles College in which Alley in Chicago is discussed, Tape 2 is an interview with Margery Frisbie concerning the same work, which took place at Northeastern Illinois University on the program Vantage Point.

Series 2: Research, 1945-1997, n.d., Boxes 1-2

Includes detailed information of Monsignor John J. Egan's life and Ministry that served as the central topic of her book, An Alley in Chicago. The records include reminiscences of his activities as a minister in Chicago, written by himself, as well as (requested) reminiscences of others who knew him. Other papers include notes and conference materials from both CCUM and CANA, photocopies of press materials related to Egan's urban renewal programs, articles (published and non-published) written by Egan which also related to urban renewal/growth. Additional papers relate to Presentation Parish and School, the Hyde Park-Kenwood Area Program, and the Center for Pastoral and Social Ministry.
