Biographical Sketch

The Cuneo family is best known for the wealth, commercial enterprises, and philanthropic endeavors of John F. Cuneo, the founder of The Cuneo Press and original owner of The Cuneo Mansion and Gardens in Libertyville, Illinois, from whence the papers in this collection originate. John F. Cuneo started his career as an owner of a book bindery but acquired his wealth through large scale purchasing and management of printing press operations across the United States. Cuneo convinced William Randolph Hearst and others in the publishing business to contract the printing and distribution of their publications under long term contracts with specific presses rather than through small, privately owned presses that took on innumerable printing jobs. Such practices required presses to recalibrate their machines and manufacturing processes every time they changed printing tasks. The process Cuneo suggested made way for streamlined production of weekly and monthly publications, creating efficiency in manufacture which pleased both publishers because of reliable and timely distribution, and presses because of reduced manufacturing costs. Cuneo also convinced publishers that the most centralized location for production and distribution was Chicago, which helped bring many of his publishing contracts to Chicago. Cuneo's expanded his venture by purchasing a number of presses across the United States, and he began to pursue economic interests in real estate and other enterprises as well. In addition, Cuneo maintained a philanthropic organization, The Cuneo Foundation, to raise money and give aid to charity. As devout Catholics, the Cuneo family was particularly devoted to Catholic organizations, for which reason Cuneo contributed funds to various Catholic charities and to Loyola University for many years.

John F. Cuneo was first married to Florence B. Hill in 1905, whom he later divorced in 1917. His second marriage was to Julia Shepherd Cuneo in 1930, with whom he had two children, John Jr. and Consuela. Cuneo's father, Frank Cuneo, was an esteemed Chicago businessman and president of Garibaldi and Cuneo, a produce firm, as well as an investor in Chicago real estate. Cuneo also had a brother, Americo Cuneo, whose estate papers are included in this collection. Their family's history in America is traced back to Cuneo's grandfather, John B. Cuneo, who came to the United States from Italy and started the family business as a local Chicago grocer.

The Cuneo Mansion in Libertyville, Illinois, formerly the estate of Samuel Insull, was purchased and refurbished by Cuneo in 1937. The mansion served as the family estate; it and the other extensive properties owned by Cuneo in the northwest suburbs served as sites where Cuneo dabbled in equestrian and agrarian interests. Cuneo eventually came to found Hawthorn Melody Farms and Hawthorn Melody Farms Dairy, where he raised cows, hogs, ponies, horses, poultry, and distributed dairy products. Ever the entrepreneur, Cuneo turned the farm and dairy into a tourist attraction complete with a zoo, where children and families could watch cows being milked, view and pet animals, and see firsthand what day to day agricultural processes were like. The dairy was reported to distribute 400,000 pounds of milk daily to the Chicagoland area. Towards the end of the late 1960s and early 1970s, as John Cuneo aged, parcels of the land were sold off, as well as the dairy operations. The estate, which was bequeathed to Cuneo's son, John Jr., was donated to Loyola University Chicago in December 2009. John Cuneo Sr. had indicated in his will that after the death of his wife, Julia, he wished for the mansion to be used for educational purposes.

Scope and Content

The Cuneo Financial Papers consists of 17 linear feet and span the years 1914-1991. It consists of both the family's personal financial records and the records of Mr. Cuneo's extensive corporate interests. It is divided into personal financial and business financial categories.

Included in the family's personal financial papers are Mr. and Mrs. Cuneo's personal income tax returns, John Jr. and Consuela Cuneo's (the children's) income tax returns, fiduciary income tax returns from the trusts of John Jr. and Consuela Cuneo, records of SEC transactions, the estate papers of relatives Americo Cuneo and Josephine Shepherd, bank statements, checks, notes, and correspondence. The series is organized first by individual and then chronologically.

The correspondence series is arranged chronologically and then alphabetically. Subjects covered are related to both the family financial and the business financial series. The majority of the papers in the series are arranged under the folder titles as designated by Mr. Cuneo or whomever he appointed to maintain his files. Subjects covered in the correspondence series include family and business taxes, farm and dairy operations and maintenance, pony and horse purchases, travel arrangements, corporate operations, and donations to charity.

The business financial papers in the collection are organized alphabetically by business names. It is important to note that Mr. Cuneo owned and oversaw an indefinite amount of businesses during the course of his lifetime; it was a common practice of his to purchase a company and retain the original business name of that company. Thus, while it has been determined that Mr. Cuneo oversaw his businesses from the vantage point of The Cuneo Press and its various subsidiaries, it has not been fully determined at this time in what way each of the businesses were affiliated and subsequently managed. Included in the business financial series are corporate tax returns, invoices, payment stubs, balance sheets, ledgers, financial statements, accountants' reports, IRS reports, judicial findings, notes, newspaper clippings, and correspondence.
