Opening remarks by Br. Michael Grace, University Archivist

In a Chicago Tribune commentary, Georgie Anne Geyer responds to social theoretician Stephen Bertman’s question, “Can a culture deprived of memory go on?” Geyer opines that, based on recent studies, America is losing its national identity. This is largely due to an increased dependence on forms and processes and a neglect of substance, that is, knowledge of our history.¹ Geyer’s views on the status of the nation in relation to its memory correlate directly to the status of an institution and its memory. Memory, both personal and collective, is easily swayed by present-day emotions. It serves many masters and is easily misused. The Loyola University Archives serves as a guardian of historical record for its community. Under the guidance of University Archivist Br. Michael Grace, SJ, the Loyola Archives staff collects, preserves, and makes available University records so that Loyolans and Americans of today and the future may garner factual knowledge of this institution’s past.

Student Staff

The past year marked the departure of two student assistants, Paul Djuricich and Frank Forts. Paul worked in the Archives for four years. In July 1999 he left to pursue a Pharmacy degree at Purdue. Frank completed a Masters Degree in History in May 1999. In August 1999 he departed for Georgia where he is studying for a Ph.D. in American History.

Susan Hanf began her service in the Archives in October 1998 while working towards a Masters Degree in Public History. In addition to processing the records of the History Department and University Administrative offices, she curates photograph displays, edits the web page, and prepared for the Midwest Archives Conference’s Annual meeting of May 2000. In August 2000 she will leave the Archives for full-time employment at the Newberry Library.

Justin Pettegrew joined the Archives staff in August 1999. Justin holds a Masters Degree in History from Minnesota State and is enrolled in the American History Doctoral Program at Loyola. His contributions to the Archives include processing records of the Catholic Church Extension Society and the Office of the Provost, assisting with photograph displays, and helping with the Midwest Archives Conference Annual Meeting of May 2000.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Statement of Purpose

As the collective memory of Loyola University Chicago, the Archives appraises, collects, organizes, describes, preserves, and makes available for research and reference use those official University records and those ancillary records of the University community of sufficient historical, legal, fiscal, and/or administrative value to warrant permanent preservation. In addition to the University’s records, the Archives is also responsible for a number of valuable manuscript collections which reflect the activities and concerns of individuals and organizations not directly connected with the University. In addition, the Archives staff services the Rare Book collection of the University Libraries. By these means, the Archives:

- Promotes knowledge and understanding of the origins, aims, programs, and goals of the University;
- Provides information services which assist in the operation of the University;
- Serves research and scholarship by making available and encouraging use of its rich resources by members of the University community as well as the world of research and scholarship outside;
- Serves as a resource and laboratory to stimulate and nourish creative teaching and learning; and
- Provides access to the valuable rare book collection.

Accessions

Acquisitions proved fruitful this year with 115 linear feet of records. Many of the collections received significantly enhance the Archives’ holdings and its usefulness to researchers. The largest collection obtained this year was that of the late Fr. Richard McCormick, SJ. McCormick taught at Loyola’s Bellarmine School of Theology in North Aurora, Illinois, and its predecessor, West Baden College in Indiana. The Archives began arranging for the possession of these records after contacting McCormick in 1995. Due to the vast size of this collection, access will remain extremely limited until the University Archivist completes a preliminary inventory and finalizes an access policy that reflects the donor’s wishes.

The Archives is also very grateful to have received the papers of former Loyola Professor and Dean of the School of Nursing, Dr. Imogene King. These records, received at the close of the year, will significantly augment the nursing records already in the Archives’ holdings. They reflect a lifetime of dedication to teaching and nursing by Dr. King and the work of the Loyola School of Nursing during her tenure there.

A third significant collection acquired this year was eight record containers of material from The Gathering. The Gathering was an annual ministerial convention run independently of any diocesan or religious institution. After twenty-three years of convening in Chicago, The Gathering held its last meeting in 2000 and sought out the Loyola University Chicago Archives as a repository for its records and photographs. Collections such as this help the Archives preserve not only the history of official University departments but also the community and religious context in which the University operates.

Processing

Processing records involves a careful and methodical sorting of all the materials received. Duplicates are removed and damaged or fragile papers are copied onto acid-free paper. The records are placed into acid-free folders that are labeled to reflect their contents. A list of the folder contents, called a container list or descriptive inventory, is created to allow staff and researchers to peruse the collection without unnecessary moving or handling of the records. As in previous years, the student Archives Assistants have diligently processed a variety of records. This year, the History Department records, as well as some records of History professors were processed. Students processed six archives boxes of records from the Communication department. In addition, six record containers of material from the Office of the Provost neared completion of processing upon the close of the year.

For some Archives materials, processing requires a different effort. This year, as in the past, the Archives sent the Loyola Phoenix (1999-2000) and the Loyola World (1999-2000) to be microfilmed. While the Archives retains the paper in its original format, the microfilm is available to all Library patrons in the periodicals Department at Cudahy Library. The Archives is also responsible for shelving, in an accessible manner, Master’s theses and Doctoral dissertations after they arrive from the bindery. Two hundred and fifty-seven volumes were alphabetized and shelved this year.

Usage

When the staff is not processing records, they are assisting researchers. Loyola faculty, staff, and students who visit the Archives are joined by outside scholars and researchers pursuing their own studies or representing film companies and publishers. Two hundred and eighteen people required the on-site services of the Archives this past year. Notable work incorporating the Archives’ holdings included Norman and Wilma Taylor’s This Train is Bound for Glory: The Story of America’s Chapel Cars, illustrated in part by twenty photographs from the Catholic Church Extension Society collection. The Great Projects Film Company of New York, London publisher Callmann and King, Ltd., and several Loyola Departments also employed Archives images in their works and displays.

The increasing commonality of technology in today’s workplace has impacted the daily operations of the Archives. Researchers more frequently call in or e-mail their requests rather than employ the postal service or their feet. This creates a demand for more instant results, unfocused questions, and last-minute requests for image duplication. The increase in the requests for image and document reproduction prompted the creation of one-page Invoice and Loan & Duplication Agreement forms. These improve the Archives’ ability to track use of the collections and to hold outside parties accountable for their use of Archives materials.

Another attempt to meet the advancement of technology in research is the Archives web page. With 818 web hits this year, an increase of 134 from 1998, the web page has become one of the most basic methods of communicating with potential researchers. Although the web page design was implemented several years ago, it still serves the department well. A new use of the web page is to post changes in the daily hours as necessitated by holidays and staff shortages and to update the descriptions of services provided.

Projected Goals for 2000-2001

The Archives always holds as a goal the acquisition and processing of University records and materials pertinent to the university community. Additional projected goals for 2000-2001 include:

Secure intellectual control of the Richard McCormick, SJ and Professor Imogene King (School of Nursing) collections. This includes developing an access policy for the McCormick collection.

Develop a policy for University Departments that outlines the procedure for depositing records in the University Archives. This policy will be best utilized as part of a records-management program.

Develop and obtain approval for an on-site researcher schedule that provides specific hours for drop-in researchers with the remaining time reserved for research by appointment only.

Serve on the Midwest Archives Local Arrangements Committee for the 2001 Spring Meeting.

ACTIVITIES

The Archives staff has served the University and Archives communities in many ways. In August 1999 the Archives hosted part of Cudahy Library’s new student orientation. Staff prepared several small photographs and document displays that highlighted student life at Loyola and showed a short video about the Madonna Della Strada chapel.

The entire staff was also very busy preparing for the spring Midwest Archives Conference (MAC) meeting, held annually in Chicago. University Archivist Br. Michael Grace and Julie Thomas of the Chicago Historical Society served as co-chairs for the Local Arrangements Committee. Loyola Archives Assistants Susan Hanf and Justin Pettegrew ran pre-registration and assisted the co-chairs in preparing for conference events.

In October, Br. Michael Grace, SJ attended the American Baptist Association conference in Green Lake, Wisconsin. He sat on a panel that discussed archival sources and their uses. In a separate session, he presented a brief history of the Catholic Church Extension Society, whose records are deposited in the Loyola University Archives. Br. Grace also sits on several University committees. He is a long-standing member of the Library Planning Council, he was recently appointed to the Library Board, and to the 130th Anniversary Committee.
