Administrative History

Serra was founded in 1934 by Harold Haberlie, Dan Rooney, Leo Sharkey and Richard Ward in Seattle, Washington. These four men and their wives met in Leo Sharkey's home to discuss the idea of starting a Catholic Service Club and thus Serra was born. The first Serra club was chartered in Seattle with 35 members in 1935. Serra officially became Serra International in 1938, at the first convention. The first official Serra club outside the United States was chartered in Victoria, British Columbia, Canada in 1943.

Serra International is named for Father Junipero Serra, a Franciscan friar who founded the mission chain in Alta, California. The mandate of Serra International is to foster and promote vocations in the Catholic Church and to aid in financing the education of seminarians. Serra clubs were chartered around the world to help promote Catholic vocations.

As interest in Serra International's work increased, so did the number of clubs. In 1954 The Serran magazine was first published in efforts to keep Serrans across the country informed. International clubs also had their version of The Serran, which was published in a variety of languages. Every year an annual convention was held to gather the clubs and decide on uniform goals for promoting Catholic vocations. Committees and programs were also created to help promote and finance vocations.

In 1946 Serra International moved its central offices to Chicago and the headquarters have remained in Chicago to this day. The growth of international clubs greatly expanded in the 1950s and 1960s as clubs were chartered in the countries of Canada, Mexico, South America, Europe, Asia, and Australia, as well additional charters across the United States. National Councils were formed in Great Britain, Brazil, and Spain in the 1970s and 1980s. In 1986, Serra International voted to welcome women as well as men to membership in the organization. The wives of Serra had always been active in the organization, but in 1986 women were finally granted full membership. Since it was founded in 1934, Serra has chartered 1,109 Serra Clubs in 46 countries on six continents.
