Greetings From the Director

Dear Friends and Colleagues,

My autumn greeting finds CCIH well into phase three of its reflection on the year 1968. With a focus last spring on the legacy of Humanae Vitae and what it means to be pro-life and another excursion in September into Daniel Berrigan, SJ, and the politics of conscience and friendship, we have been treated to astute insights and constructive dialogue supplied and facilitated by premier scholars, public figures, activists, and students. We have also had great success with our 1968 FilmFest and it's been particularly gratifying to observe students watch and engage with films of that era. The films really do hold up well--and my two favorites of the series are playing this week and next. Medium Cool, a vastly prescient and prophetic film on journalism, Chicago in 1968, and the whims of power, plays on Monday (10/22); and the unforgettable dystopian classic, Planet of the Apes, plays on Tuesday (10/30). Please be our guest for pizza and a post film conversation.

Our featured event of our year-long 1968 Series is also upon us this week. The much anticipated Global ’68 Symposium Days of Past Present, a three day, multi panel event featuring distinguished scholars--local, national, and international--is setting up to be something special. The symposium is many months in the making and has wide co-sponsorship including the Departments of History, Modern Languages and Literatures, Theology, Political Science, Film and Digital Media, The College of Arts and Sciences, Ramonat Seminar, and the University Libraries. In particular, I'd like to thank Professors Ellie Shermer and Michelle Nickerson (both of History) for their excellent and indispensable collaboration.

1968 speaks to us today as revolutions of all kinds, some violent, such as the Tet Offensive in January, and some peaceful, such as Thomas Merton's participation in interreligious dialogue with the Dalai Lama in December, were causing seismic shifts in the political, cultural and religious landscape of human life. Political and social movements demanded attention and action and it is almost impossible to do justice to the volume of activity that occurred in 1968. The assassinations for Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Robert Kennedy-just two months apart--destabilized an already fragile and threadbare global community reeling from and/or embracing so many global convulsions. Within the Roman Catholic Church, changes to liturgy were underway, Catholic colleges and universities began to deal with the implications of the Land O'Lakes Statement, and seismic shifts were taking place in religious life and how members of religious orders engaged with the world and their superiors.
Our symposium asks many questions of 1968. How does 2018 rhyme with 1968? How are the various changes and turbulences of our lives together today like 1968? What structures and philosophies are worth saving? What is the meaning of protest? Of peace and justice? Of democracy, inclusion, and human flourishing? Of human and social sin, greed, and precarity? What are the limits of identification with political and social movements--as Catholics, Americans, or the various other affiliations that constitute our identities? What is the way forward? These questions resonate and require research, reflection, and dialogue.

Hope to see you this week and,

Warmest Regards,

Dr. Michael P. Murphy

From student riots and papal encyclicals to political convulsions and civil rights battles, to the height of the Vietnam War and the assassinations of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Robert F. Not unlike 2018, 1968 saw significant moments in the life of the Church, the Civil Rights movement, and in global politics and culture. 1968 was so impacted by student movements and youth awakenings that it is often referred to as the "Year of the Student."

RECOMMENDED READING
Each month CCIH will recommend notable books-- both classic and new--that integrate, interrogate, and celebrate the Catholic intellectual, cultural, and artistic tradition.

The Art of the Wasted Day
by Patricia Hampl

The Art of the Wasted Day is a compelling celebration of the purpose and appeal of letting go. Hampl's own life winds through these pilgrimages, from childhood days lazing under a neighbor's beechnut tree, to a fascination with monastic life, and then to love--and the loss of that love which forms this book's silver thread of inquiry. Finally, a remembered journey down the Mississippi near home in an old cabin cruiser with her husband turns out, after all her international quests, to be the great adventure of her life. As Maureen Corrigan notes, "It's impossible to do justice to the cumulative power of Hampl's dream-weaver writing style by just quoting a few lines. You have to go on the whole voyage with her . . . by wasting some of your time with Hampl, you'll understand more of what makes life worth living."

And-- in the Spirit of our Global '68 Symposium...

Introduction to Christianity
by Joseph Cardinal Ratzinger

One of Cardinal Ratzinger's most important and widely read books, Introduction to Christianity was born out of the days immediately following Vatican II and becomes a touchstone for the subsequent development of his ecclesiology of continuity. The future Pope Benedict XVI arrived in Tubingen in 1966 at the request of his friend, Hans Kung; he left this prestigious position in late in 1968. So many changes and significant events occurred in the world as he gave his lectures and the students at Tubingen, fully engaged in the signs of the times, often tested their professors on serious questions. In many ways, Ratzinger's text is a reaction to this. His approach puts the question of God and the question about Christ in the very center, which leads to a "narrative Christology" that both insists on eschatological care and demonstrates that the place for faith is in the Church-even in the context of radical social change. His approach is not without controversy. On the one hand, supportive readings applaud his treatment of Christianity's basic truths, combining a spiritual outlook with a deep knowledge of Scripture and the history of theology; critical readings lament the absence of pastorally meaningful engagement with the many injuries to justice that characterize the age.
The Unbearable Lightness of Being
by Milan Kundera

The Unbearable Lightness of Being, grows out of the dramatic political, spiritual, and cultural convulsions of the Prague Spring of 1968 and is a major achievement from one of the world's truly great writers. Milan Kundera's magnificent novel of passion and politics, infidelity and ideas, encompasses the extremes of comedy and tragedy, illuminating all aspects of human existence. The story at its root is of a young woman in love with a man torn between his love for her and his incorrigible womanizing and one of his mistresses and her humbly faithful lover. But the novel is so much more-juxtaposing geographically distant places (including theological and philosophical places), brilliant and playful reflections about art and life, and a variety of styles to take its place to form a late modern masterpiece.

From Revolution to Ethics
by Julian Bourg

Our Global '68 Symposium: Days of Past Present keynote speaker, Julian Bourg, argues that during the subsequent decade the revolts led to a remarkable paradigm shift in French thought—the concern for revolution in the 1960s was transformed into a fascination with ethics. Challenging the prevalent view that the 1960s did not have any lasting effect, From Revolution to Ethics shows how intellectuals and activists turned to ethics as the touchstone for understanding interpersonal, institutional, and political dilemmas. In absorbing and scrupulously researched detail Bourg explores the developing ethical fascination as it emerged among student Maoists courting terrorism, anti-psychiatric celebrations of madness, feminists mobilizing against rape, and pundits and philosophers championing humanitarianism. From Revolution to Ethics provides a compelling picture of how May 1968 helped make ethics a compass for navigating contemporary global concerns.
