The Teaching Scholars program is designed to assist advanced graduate students in their preparation as scholar-teachers by providing a series of experiences, activities, and responsibilities appropriate to the scholar-teacher. These include teaching no more than one course from the undergraduate curriculum and mentoring new graduate student teachers as a part of the Graduate School’s Teaching Effectiveness Seminar. These activities are designed to help students to integrate teaching and research by:

- developing effective communication skills;
- developing an identity as a teacher and scholar;
- developing mentorship skills and serve as mentors;
- learning innovative ways to effectively enhance teaching.

No more than two applications per department can be submitted.

Teaching Scholar Award
This award is available for advanced Ph.D. students in participating departments in the College of Arts and Sciences only. The award is for September 2020 through May 2021 and provides a stipend, a tuition award scholarship, and health insurance.

Eligibility Requirements
Applicants are expected to have experience as a teacher of record for a course at Loyola University Chicago or another college/university, or as a teaching assistant at Loyola University Chicago. If an applicant does not meet this expectation owing to special circumstances (e.g., holding a Crown Fellowship, that does not require teaching), the applicant’s graduate program director must write a cover letter for the application explaining the special circumstances.

Students with identities that are under-represented in their disciplines are strongly encouraged to apply. The Graduate School at Loyola University Chicago believes that students and our community are best served when the university population reflects the larger society and encourages the programs under its jurisdiction to embrace diversity and strive for inclusion. A diverse academic community enhances the pursuit of knowledge and its contribution to our understanding of the world around us.

Applicants must be in good academic standing. Typically, applicants will not be in the final stages of their dissertation work. The expectation is that these students will have the opportunity to serve as teaching mentors in their departments beyond the award year. In most cases, applicants should have completed their departmental teaching training program before the Teaching Scholars year begins.

The Teaching Scholar Award is conditional upon the applicant’s meeting all eligibility requirements, which are the applicant’s sole responsibility. The application of a student who does not meet the eligibility requirements will not be considered. If it is determined that the recipient has not met the eligibility requirements after a decision has been made, the award will be withdrawn.

Decision Criteria
The Graduate Awards and Fellowships Committee, an independent body of Graduate School faculty members from a variety of disciplines, reviews the applications and makes award recommendations based on the following criteria:

- the applicant’s academic and background information;
- the applicant’s course syllabus, statement of goals and/or teaching philosophy, and other representative teaching materials;
- supporting faculty member evaluations and recommendations; and
- departmental evaluation of the applicant.

Conditions of Receiving a Teaching Scholar Award

In accepting an award, each recipient agrees to:

1) teach no more than one undergraduate course during the academic year as assigned by the department;
2) required participation in the Teaching Effectiveness Seminar;
3) required attendance at regular meetings of the scholars;
4) required planning meeting(s) – one in May, possible second meeting in early August
5) required meetings with mentees;
6) not hold a concurrent assistantship, fellowship, or scholarship from another source, part-time teaching position or employment exceeding 19.5 hours per week during the award period.
