Online Masters Global Competition Law Welcomes its Second Class in September

The first cohort of students began the online Global Competition Law Masters Program in August 2015. They included senior management and staff from two different competition agencies; in-house counsel for a multinational corporation in Peru; an American MBA working in the public sector in Cambodia; and a law firm partner in Chile.

The Global Competition Law masters program is the first completely online program of its kind. Degrees include the Master of Law (LLM) program for students with a prior law degree and a Masters in Jurisprudence (MJ) for professionals in the field whose degree is in related non-legal fields such as economics and business.

The online Global Competition Law Masters is a two year part-time program designed to accommodate the schedule of working professionals. The Global Competition Law curriculum is completely asynchronous and can be done by students anywhere in the world in keeping with their own work and personal schedules.

The Global Competition Law faculty is global and includes full-time and adjunct Loyola faculty, members of the Institute Advisory Boards, and leading competition academics, practitioners, and enforcers from around the globe.

We offer scholarships up to 70% based on the level of economic development of the student’s jurisdiction.

For the first time non-degree students may take individual courses on a space available basis and receive a certificate of completion.

More details and applications for the September 2016 term Global Competition Law LLM and MJ programs are available at LUC.edu/antitrust/globalcompetition.

We welcome questions and expressions of interest at antitrust@luc.edu.

Global Competition Law Curriculum and Faculty

The online Global Competition Law LLM and MJ Masters Programs consist of 20 hours of asynchronous instruction and instructor contact completed part-time over two years.

All students must complete four mandatory courses in year one:

- Principles of Competition Law
- Intellectual Property Law Survey
- Law and Economics
- International & Comparative Competition Law

Students then must complete four of the following electives in year two:

- U.S. Antitrust Law
- European Union Competition Law
- International Merger Regulation
- International Cartel Regulation
- Comparative Consumer Law
- Corporate Compliance
- Enforcement and Institutions
- Indian & Chinese Competition Law
- Optional LLM Thesis

MJ students are not eligible for the LLM thesis course and must complete their electives through course work.

The Global Competition Law faculty consist of practitioners, professors, and enforcers from the United States, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, England, Germany, Hong Kong, Ireland, and Israel to bring you the most complete global perspective on competition law and assist you in developing the skills to succeed in your jurisdiction.

For more information and applications go to LUC.edu/antitrust/globalcompetition or contact us at antitrust@luc.edu.

Scholarships and Individual Courses Available

The online LLM and MJ in Global Competition Law is unique in scaling tuition to the level of economic development in the jurisdiction of the student. Tied to the United Nation Development Index, LLM and MJ students in developing countries are eligible for scholarships up to 50% of tuition and students in least developed developing countries are eligible for scholarships up to 70% of tuition. Group discounts are available as well for enforcement agencies, corporations, and law firms.

Beginning in August 2016, non-degree students may also apply to take individual courses on a space available basis.

Institute and ABA Antitrust Section Partner in September 2016 on Competition in Health Law and Financial Services

The Institute is proud to announce that it will co-sponsor with the Antitrust Section of the ABA and the Beazley Health Law Institute a September 20, 2016 program on Health Care and Financial Services: Competition and Consumers in Regulated Industries. This day long interdisciplinary symposium will take place in the 10th floor Ceremonial Courtroom at the Corboy Law Center. Speakers include leading professors, practitioners, and policy makers from the worlds of law, medicine, regulation, banking, and economics. Full details and speakers available shortly on the Institute and Antitrust Section web sites.
FTC Commissioner McSweeney to Headline 2016 Antitrust Colloquium

FTC Commissioner Terrell McSweeney will keynote the April 15th 2016 Loyola Antitrust Colloquium as our lunch speaker. The full video and text of her talk will be available on the Institute web site in the Media Room following the colloquium.

The 2016 Colloquium will also feature four outstanding papers, commentary, and the usual robust discussion.

Professor Maurice Stucke of the University of Tennessee College of Law will begin the day with a presentation on his new co-authored book Big Data and Competition Policy.

Professor Ariel Ezrachi of Pembrooke College, Oxford University will conclude his week at Loyola as a Visiting Scholar with his provocative new paper Sponge about how antitrust law, by its nature, provides for an absorbent and flexible platform which soaks up national values and interests.

Finally, Professor Matthew Jennejohn of BYU School of Law will discuss Informal Networks and Antitrust Enforcement: Preliminary Evidence from U.S. Merger Control.

Please join us on April 15th! Request your invitation at antitrust@luc.edu.
