The course will begin by tracing the development of the former Soviet Union, and evaluate the roles and processes of the European Union, and the patterns of political participation and behavior of diverse individuals, groups, and governments in the European Union.

This course will introduce students to the origins and various forms of European nationalism, continue with the establishment of nation states in Western and Eastern Europe, and end with a discussion of various national and ethnic issues that dominate European political and ideological discourse today.